MARKET COMMENTARY

US REITs faced significant headwinds in March as the market shifted toward a risk-off posture amid heightened geopolitical tensions and broader market volatility. The correction impacted various subsectors, with smaller-cap and pro-cyclical segments like Lodging and Industrial underperforming, while self-storage REITs experienced continued pressure from depressed street rates and constrained demand due to a locked-in housing market. Healthcare and Data Center REITs demonstrated relative resilience, benefiting from strong upward estimate revisions and defensive characteristics. Despite near-term challenges including elevated supply in certain segments and softening fundamentals, stable interest rate expectations and solid operational fundamentals position the sector for potential recovery as market conditions normalize.
