MARKET COMMENTARY

Global stocks rose in January driven by strong performance in international markets, U.S. small caps, and emerging markets, supported by robust earnings and a weaker dollar. European stocks surged amid softer inflation data and prospects of a rate cut, while Japan's election news boosted equities and lowered bonds. U.S. small caps outperformed on solid economic data and expectations of modest fiscal stimulus. Style-wise, value stocks outpaced growth, with energy, materials, and industrials leading sectors. Fixed income experienced varied results, with long-term Treasuries under pressure from rising rates, while U.S. municipals and credit markets performed well amid resilient economic indicators. Despite Japanese bond yield increases, developed market international bonds gained, benefiting from easing inflation and dollar trends.

Since the target fund is USD-denominated, the return of this peso share class fund was slightly affected by a slight movement between the Philippine peso and the US dollar.
