MARKET COMMENTARY

Global stocks rose in December, driven by European and Chinese markets amid steady ECB policy and improved manufacturing data indicating China's industrial recovery. The ECB maintained rates, raised eurozone growth forecasts to 1.4% for 2025, and signaled stabilizing inflation near 2%. U.S. stocks initially rallied after the Fed's rate decision but declined in the final days, ending the year close to all-time highs. Value stocks and cyclical sectors like Financials, Materials, and Industrials outperformed, while defensive sectors such as Utilities, REITs, Healthcare, and Consumer Staples underperformed. Overall, the month reflected cautious optimism, with signs of economic resilience supporting a modest risk-on stance heading into the new year.
