MARKET COMMENTARY

Global equities advanced in October, supported by a US interest rate cut and strong enthusiasm for AI. Japanese stocks rallied notably following the election of Prime Minister Sanae Takaichi, who is known for her pro-business approach. While emerging markets outperformed developed markets, Chinese stocks declined amid renewed economic concerns. Market volatility increased slightly, with the VIX ending at 19.1, indicating relative stability. The MSCI ACWI saw gains across most sectors, led by information technology, utilities, and healthcare, while real estate, materials, and financials lagged. Key contributors included holdings in Shopify, TSMC, and Broadcom, whereas Nvidia and Meta Platforms detracted from performance, with no exposure to AMD. Overall, the month reflected positive equity performance amid sector and stock-specific variations.
