MARKET COMMENTARY

Global equities rose in December, led by European and Chinese markets amid steady ECB policies and positive manufacturing data signaling a recovery in China's industrial sector. U.S. stocks ended the year near all-time highs despite a weak final month, with value stocks and cyclical sectors outperforming, while defensive sectors lagged. Fixed income markets exhibited mixed performance; credit improved, but longer-maturity bonds underperformed due to rising rates, though high-yield bonds benefited from U.S. economic resilience. International bonds, including emerging markets, gained on signs of inflation stabilization and a weaker U.S. dollar. Overall, the month reflected cautious optimism driven by improved economic signals and moderating inflation, supporting a modest risk-on tone for the coming period.
