MARKET COMMENTARY

The U.S. economy contracted 0.5% in Q1, primarily due to a tariff-driven import surge, raising recession concerns despite a potential Q2 rebound. The Fed maintained rates at 4.25-4.50%, signaling a cautious stance amid persistent inflation from tariffs and higher costs in vehicles and furnishings. Markets anticipate an earlier rate cut by July, though a September and December cut remain consensus. The Fed's projections lowered 2025 GDP growth to 1.4% and increased inflation estimates to 3%. Fiscal and geopolitical risks, including rising deficits and trade tensions, have stabilized yields at around 4.23%, with a steep yield curve reflecting increased borrowing needs and debt concerns. Investor sentiment remains cautious with expectations of rate cuts in H2 2025 amid soft growth prospects and fiscal pressures.
